Meet your helper. Inside your files.

claude just moved into your google docs

Claude now sits in a sidebar inside Google Docs, Sheets, and Slides. It can read the file you have open and make edits right inside it. You approve each change one by one, so nothing slips in without you. It is in public beta now for paid Claude plans. Here are 10 prompts to copy, paste, and use in your real marketing work.

1 Rewrite this like I talk.
Rewrite this draft in my voice. Keep it friendly, short sentences, no fancy words.

2 Turn my notes into an email.
Turn these rough notes into a short email for my customers. Give it a subject line.

3 Cut this in half.
Make this text half as long. Keep every key point. Drop the fluff.

4 Write 10 hooks for this idea.
Give me 10 first-line hooks for this topic. Make each one a full sentence I can use.

5 Fix the tone before I send.
Read this and tell me if it sounds friendly, bossy, or bored. Then fix it so it sounds friendly and confident.

6 Explain my spreadsheet in plain words.
Look at this sheet and tell me what the numbers mean in three short sentences.

7 Find the messy data.
Find duplicate rows, empty cells, and weird formatting in this sheet, and fix them.

8 Turn bullets into a slide.
Turn these bullet points into clean slide text: one big headline, three short lines.

9 Describe this chart for me.
Write one sentence that describes what this chart shows, in plain words a teen would understand.

10 Draft the follow-up note.
After reading my meeting notes in this doc, draft a short follow-up message I can send.

THE RULE TO REMEMBER

Claude drafts, you approve.

Every edit lands one by one, and you say yes to each one. Never publish something you did not read. Claude saves the typing time. You keep the final word.
